  - How to Feel Authentic While Building Your Personal Brand: Many people recoil when they hear the term personal brand. If that’s you, Susan Muchin, an adjunct lecturer at Northwestern, suggests that you think of it more as your story. She writes, “The most incisive question you can ask yourself is “What do I want to be memorable for?” If you ask that question—which is ultimately a version of “what makes me special?”—your stories will begin to surface.” Read Muchin’s full article to learn more.

- Elements to consider in personal branding
  - Career Readiness Competencies - As you think about your brand, you may want to consider demonstrating Career Readiness Competencies. The National Association of Colleges and Employers surveyed more than 600 hiring organizations across nearly 20 industries to identify what makes a job candidate “career ready.” As you develop your digital brand, consider how you can highlight your competencies.

  - Dress to impress! Professional attire boosts confidence. Or at least wear pants and a Zoom shirt.
  - Replace handshakes with a pleasant demeanor! Smile, introduce yourself, and ask the interviewer how they are doing.
• Have your elevator pitch memorized, and use it, ending with a question for the interviewer to answer.

• Make eye contact as best you can. To do this online, try to move the employer’s image near your webcam so that when you talk, you are virtually looking the speaker in their eyes.

• Create a nice space to meet. Try as best you can to log in from a professional space. Minimize distractions and consider using a virtual backgrounds if that would be preferred.

• Follow-up: Ask your interviewer how you can follow up, and what next steps they recommend. Send a thank you note reiterating your intention to take their advice.
